Introduction

There are four Grand Slam tournaments in tennis: the Australian Open, the French Open, the US Open, and Wimbledon. Wimbledon was first held in 1877. In 1988, the Australian Open changed to hardcourt. Wimbledon is now the only Grand Slam played on grass. The tournament is held for two weeks in late June and early July.

Traditions

The traditional Wimbledon colors are dark green and purple, but players have to wear all-white or nearly all-white clothing.

Men and women are called 'Gentlemen' and 'Ladies' at Wimbledon. The players have to bow to the English Queen or the Prince of Wales (her oldest son) if they are present. → If they are there.

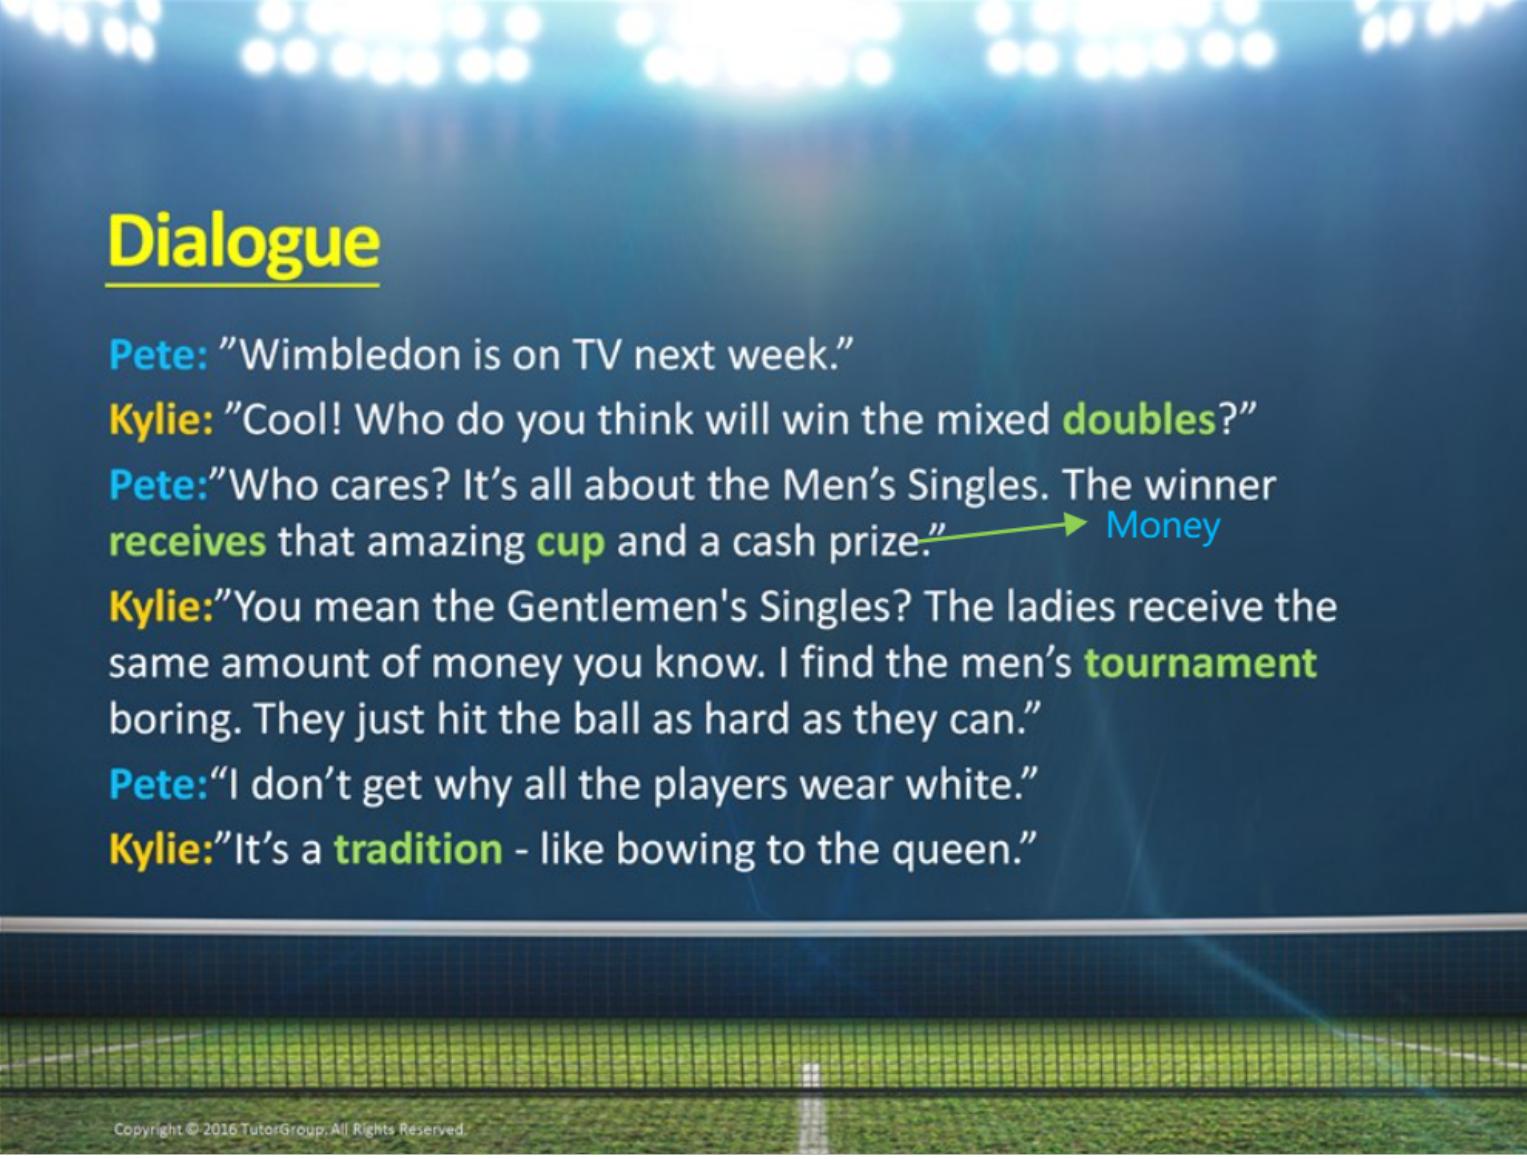

Strawberries and cream are traditionally eaten at Wimbledon.

- Yes I do watch Wimbledon

Do thy wear white clothes = Yes they do,

Dialogue

Pete: "Wimbledon is on TV next week."

Kylie: "Cool! Who do you think will win the mixed doubles?"

Pete: "Who cares? It's all about the Men's Singles. The winner receives that amazing cup and a cash prize." → Money

Kylie: "You mean the Gentlemen's Singles? The ladies receive the same amount of money you know. I find the men's tournament boring. They just hit the ball as hard as they can."

Pete: "I don't get why all the players wear white."

Kylie: "It's a tradition - like bowing to the queen."
